

The impact of the pandemic on human resources and network management

A perspective from the Eurodesk network

Audrey Frith

Abstract

The article describes how the European youth information network Eurodesk and its multipliers and coordinators have adapted to the corona-related restrictions and which ways and methods have been found to continue offering their services and to reach the target groups.

In addition, the article also addresses important developments in human resources management that are relevant for the network when it comes to developing its membership services and reflects on the legacy of the pandemic on youth mobility and greening youth information services in Europe.
